Help! Gospel events on 'life support'

— Ohemaa Mercy cries to Corporate Ghana

By Jessica Love Otoo

AWARD-winning Gospel musician Ohemaa Mercy has sounded an alarm on the dire state of gospel events in the country and is urging corporate Ghana to come to the rescue.

She likens the desperate situation to a sick person on a life support machine and that until corporate Ghana lends a hand, the only option might be to pull the plug which will lead to the death of gospel events.

In a conversation with Graphic Showbiz on the

Guru

I AM extremely disappointed that our own NKZ Guru has been disqualified from the University of Ghana SRC Presidential race.

It is unfair that he was disqualified simply because he's a non-residential student. Must one be a residential student to be eligible for that position?

Someone might think I am being bias just because he's a musician and a celebrity. I just believe he genuinely deserved that position. I hope this decision is revisited.

Tracy Boakye

WHAT at all do people want from actress and producer, Tracy Boakye?

I just can't understand why she is being bashed after her recent interview, where she admitted she gets jealous when she sees her husband in a romantic scene with other women in movies.

Yes, she acknowledges it's just business, but she just can't help it. As a human being it is only natural to be jealous sometimes. So it can't be easy to watch your husband get intimate with someone else, even if it's just acting.

It's natural to have feelings, so I don't judge her for being honest about her emotions. Many people have issues with various things, and it's unfair to single her out. Please let her be.

Joyce Dzidzor

I Recently read a story about Joyce Dzidzor where she spoke out against bloggers who post negative content on celebs to attract eyeballs to their handles.

I stand with her because I also believe it's time for bloggers to stop exploiting people's personal struggles for clicks.

They often publicly scrutinise individuals without considering their mental well-being. Mental health is crucial, so let's prioritise kindness. Instead of spreading negativity, bloggers should share positive and uplifting content as well.

I hope they take Joyce's words to heart and make a change, promoting a more supportive and compassionate online community.

Black Sherif

I WAS very happy when I read the Graphic Showbiz article about Black Sherif's unconventional dressing style.

I hope he continues to shine with his unique fashion sense. He inspires me with his bold style, and I appreciate his confidence in expressing himself through fashion. While some may find it humorous, I enjoy the commentary surrounding him.

I wish Black Sherif continued success and growth, and I look forward to see his future endeavours. His individuality is refreshing, and I hope he remains true to himself.
