Consolidating democratic gains:

Reject violent politicians

- NCCE

By Timothy Ngnenbe

HE Chairperson of the National Commission for Civic Education (NCCE), Kathleen Addy, has called on Ghanaians to reject politicians who resort to the use of violence and disruptive tendencies to gain political power as the country heads to the 2024 general election.

Ms Addy said perpetrators of political violence should no longer be allowed any space to operate because apart from posing serious security threats to the country, their activities denied the citizenry the right leaders who could help consolidate the country's democracy.

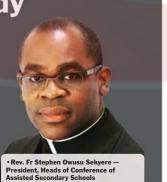

"Fellow citizens, it is our duty to punish politicians who employ insults, intimidation and violence in their quest for power and position. Let us deny them what they seek, so that they will learn their lessons," she stressed.

Ms Addy made the call at a media engagement organised by the NCCE in Accra last Saturday to commemorate the 30th

Dear January, be kind!

IT is dawn on Monday morning as I write, having just arrived home after a night out in Kumasi celebrating the new year with family and friends. Travelling down Bantama High Street from the Komfo Anokye Teaching Hospital (Gee) roundabout towards the market in the night was like being caught in the thick of a global street carnival.
